Summary

Dr. Rodrigo M. Corder is an Assistant Professor in the Department of Parasitology at the Institute of Biomedical Sciences of the University of São Paulo. His research primarily focuses on the development of mathematical models for infectious diseases, particularly malaria, to produce empirical evidence to inform strategic decision-making in the implementation of public policies targeting the control of infectious diseases. Before becoming a professor, Dr. Corder was a postdoctoral researcher at the University of California, Berkeley (2021-2023), following his doctorate in sciences from the University of São Paulo in 2021.
